The story of the 100th Battalion to be told in film this summer

The 100th Seeds of Aloha documentary film about the American 100th Infantry Battalion's role in the Second World War is to be released on 4 July this year, Freedom for Italy has been told. It is the second instalment of the three-part Shaka Project film series about Hawaii.

Also known as The Purple Heart Battalion, the 100th was formed in Hawaii and proved so capable that their performance led to the formation of the 442nd Regimental Combat Team, a larger unit of Americans of Japanese ancestry. The combined 100th/442nd RCT became one of the most highly decorated units in US military history, serving in Salerno, Monte Cassino, Anzio, the liberation of Rome, the campaign in northern Italy and the liberation of France.

"I was asked to help with the European side of the film due to my work as tour guide for Nisei veterans," Nora de Bievre of Nisei Legacy Tours told Freedom for Italy. "The documentary will bring more clarity and tell the story from a different perspective."

Shaka A Story of Aloha, the first part of the trilogy, has been released and the third part, Ono Fruits of Aloha, is due to go into production. Producer of the series is Steve Sue, Chairperson of ID8 which is a Honolulu-based 501(C)(3) nonprofit organisation. The 100th Seeds of Aloha was inspired by Kathi Hayashi whose father Tokuichi was in the National Guard and the 100th in the war.
